

Lainie Senechal

Sketch #27

(from Sketches of Lake Attitash)

Winter's vacation:

warm mists,
whiter than snow,
rise from vales.

Rainbows follow rain
that follows rainbows.

Juncos, small winged
wisps of gray clouds,
land on lawn;
search for seed
among brown grasses.

Water flows
down streets, over banks,
into large puddles
that block the road.

Rain polishes ice
on lake's surface,
a looking-glass
for the sky.

Sketch #17

(from Sketches of Lake Attitash)

Above black clouds
sun lays a silver sheen
on lake's surface
before it sinks into the gloom.
A pair of loons catch fish in center of light, while swallows dart near shore.
They swoop so close
but I cannot perceive
the prey they seek.

Sketch #11

(from Sketches of Lake Attitash)

At end of storm
breeze plays frivolously
among fronds of hemlock.
Sun finally appears
above streaks of solemn clouds;
ignites frost along branches,
party lights above the lake.
It is hard to be bothered
by this blizzard
for rain softens the snow
and birds sing
their mating song.