

Susan Tepper

Leached

We left the fish to dry the salt leached from their eyes it was a quiet day--
a sun barely able, pale, indistinguishable: the mountain hovering as if,
but what's the difference You've gone missing again, in the stacks books are silent leaves from a past
dark and dusty dream
and I'm alone—