

Wilderness House Literary Review 2/1

Us

If we're embraced
in the hurricane's poked eye, why do we still rise and spin?

Darling--and I call you that
with no mocking meter,
no poetic mask for conceit—
I don't know why, even as our soaring causes unowned satellites
to call us peers,
I scream that we're falling.